Subject: College of Sciences Monday Matters: Thank You!

DearColleagues:

As Thanksgiving pproached want to take this opportunity to thank all of you for your incrediblehard work this semester. On top of the stressof stayings afeduring a pandemic, having kids at home, the election, and the renewed energy around social justice, we have had to deal with our regular job duties. Many of you are working extra hours, teaching more, putting classes on line, and trying to help students succeed espite all their challenges Others are dealing with new administrative procedures in an environment where many are working from home and it is harder to get things done. In addition we have the undeniable stress of not interacting in person with our coworkers. It is so much easier to avoid misunder standing or frustration when we get to see our coworkers every day. We have to utilize technology in new ways to get our work done, and to communicate consistently.

The goodnews is that we are succeeding. I am proud of the way everyone in our college has steppedup to do what needs to be done. You have all shown a great deal of perseverance and flexibility, the result of which is that our students are learning, graduates tudents are defending and graduating papers are getting published, and proposal are being funded. I know we are all worried about the success of our students this semester and next, and that is a very real problem that we will have to address in coming semesters. But for now I want to commend everyone's effort and commit (wind southfat una statut southfat una statu
